Volume 1 No. 1
Our premier newsletter issue!

July—December 2005
Chapter #164 of the BCCA

The BCCA's newest chapter is up and collecting
And you made it possible!

President's Message

Wow! What a year 2005 has been. Who would of thought a year ago that the central and southern half of Indiana would have a new chapter of the Brewery Collectables Club of America. And not just a chapter of folks with a common interest in breweriana. But a chapter with members from coast to coast, all over the Midwest, past presidents, hall of fame members and not one but two members currently on the national board of directors!

The BCCA is an organization rich in history and tradition. With several well established chapters already in the Midwest, the South-Central chapter must hold its own by looking within it's self. By that I mean in addition to the people I just mentioned our chapter has members in it that are long time BCCA veterans with a world of knowledge in breweriana. We have members that specialize in tough-to-find classic cans with opening instructions, test cans, pull tab cans, cone top designs, can sizes of all kinds, and in current can series and designs. Also in the latest micro breweries production and what's happening in the industry this very day. We have members who simply enjoy casual collecting on the weekends at flea markets and on vacations. Others who specialize in rare high dollar items. We have members who have compiled a rich history of breweries in Indiana and the Midwest with point-of-sale items, coasters, labels, newspaper articles, photographs, back-bar items, bottles, signs and advertisements of every type. Some who specialize in specific items and others with a broad range. Others who specialize in the art of can restoration. In short; we are a chapter to be recognized. And with that recognition I feel comes responsibility.

Some of us have been able to donate man hours and travel time for other chapters and the BCCA. Others simply have enough time to attend a few meetings a year. Whatever your situation is I encourage each and every one of our chapter members to do whatever they can to make our chapter stronger. Also whenever possible, to promote the national organization of the BCCA. Always be on the lookout for new members to join the national club. COMUNICACION IS A MUST! Take just a few minutes a month to email thoughts, ideas, information and interests to myself and others.

In the coming months our goal will be to coordinate a local day trade show or better still work with other chapters in the area to create a truly impressive regional show. It can't happen all at once but with communication, dedication and motivation The South-Central Indiana Brewers chapter will earn its place in the history of the BCCA. Thanks for making this chapter possible!

Step Up!

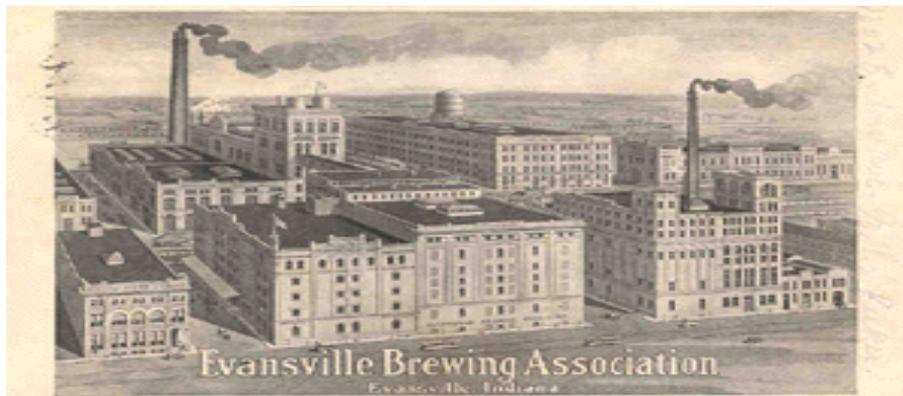

By Lea Colvin #1462

Congratulations to Indiana's newest BCCA Board of Director members, Mike Pope and Fred Johnson. Think about it. They are President and Vice President of our chapter. Is this a coincidence? I think not! If you have the betterment of the hobby in mind, and the time and willingness, then you can go as far as you want to in this hobby. Step up and be heard, friends. Contact any of the officers of the SCIB, or myself, if you want to assist in any way. This chapter wants your participation in meetings, shows, input, and friendship!

We can go as far as our membership will take us. The sky is the limit. It would be nice if we could tour members collections after a meeting. Say, have a meeting at my house, then tour Derrick's, or Fred's, or Steve's, etc. Lets make a meeting a BCCA experience! I always have something to say, but with this being our first newsletter, I thought I would address our chapters success! We are in great hands with plenty of support from our membership. However, we want YOU to be a big part of that support too.

Is eBay Ruining Our Hobby?

By Greg Gerke #28311

I know, I know, how dare I pick on such a great service like eBay? I'm not saying there's anything wrong with eBay, I just question weather they are good for the hobby of beer can/breweraina collecting, that's all.

In my opinion, what makes our hobby great isn't the acquisition of vast amounts of beer cans or a better collection than the next guy's, it's the fellowship and personal experiences of the membership in the chapter and the BCCA. I like to get a great can in a great trade as much as anyone, but getting to know the people as you travel around to the shows is a big part of the appeal to the hobby.

eBay is the antithesis of getting to know people and sharing a good trade. eBay actually discourages communication among its members, preferring to control any discussion by using its restrictive system to send email and ask questions. While it is possible to converse with an individual in the eBay system, it can be difficult and frustrating. Worrying that someone may be making deals outside eBay's influence, the service will let you know their frustration with a "nasty-gram" saying "never talk to people making offers outside of eBay's world . . ." (I'm sure some of you have received this message by accident). They even discourage you from using your real name as if you were in the CIA.

eBay is a great service if all you are trying to do is locate that rare beer sign or you just like buying/selling stuff without ever seeing the person on the other end. It's strictly a money-thing at that point it reduces the hobby to a clandestine sales operation. But that's not what our hobby is all about. Try to imagine what the BCCA would be like if it operated like eBay.

That said, I've used eBay before, as most of you have. I bought a very nice beer bottle on eBay this year, for instance. eBay has its place, but in my opinion, it's not good for the hobby. I got into the hobby not so I could build a better collection than the next guy, but because I enjoyed the friendship and experiences that came with building my collection.

Drinker's Delight: Beer May Fight Disease

A Unique Compound in Ale Intrigues Oregon Researchers

By Joy Victory

Submitted by Chip Viering #32203

"Mmmm . . . Beer." This oft-repeated sentiment of Homer Simpson is a mantra for the millions of beer drinkers in the United States. As popular as beer is, however, it often has gotten a bad rap as a calorie-loaded beverage that only serves to create paunchy beer bellies and alcohol-fueled lapses in judgment. But that negative image may begin to fade: Research is showing that beer could join the ranks of other guilt-inducing but wildly popular foods—chocolate, coffee and red wine—as possible disease-fighter. It turns out that beer hops contain a unique micronutrient that inhibits cancer-causing enzymes. Ops are plants used in beer to give it aroma, flavor and bitterness. The compound, xanthohumol, was first isolated by researchers with Oregon State University 10 years ago. Initial testing was promising, and now an increasing number of laboratories across the world have been studying the Compound, said Fred Stevens, an assistant professor of medicinal chemistry at Oregon State's College of Pharmacy. Earlier this year, a German research journal even devoted an entire issue to xanthohumol, he said. What Stevens and others are discovering is that xanthohumol has several unique effects. Along with inhibiting tumor growth and other enzymes that activate cancer cells, it also helps the body make unhealthy compounds more water-soluble, so they can be excreted. Most beers able today are low on hops, however, and so don't contain much xanthohumol. But beers known for being "hoppy"—usually porter, stout and ale types—have much higher levels of the compound. Oregon's microbrews ranked particularly high, Stevens said, which is not surprising: U.S. hops are grown almost entirely in the Northwest. Still, no one knows how much beer is needed to reap the benefits. Mice studies show that the compound is metabolized

Quickly into the body, so it's hard to get a large amount in the body at one time, Stevens said. "It clearly has some interesting chemo-preventive properties, and the only way people are getting any of it right now is through beer consumption," he said.

A brief history of Lafayette Brewing Inc.

The brewery was founded by John Wagner in 1858. It's location in town was on 4th and Union streets. After a short partnership with local business man Dietrich Herbert who then sold his interest in the brewery to Frederick Thieme, the brewery operated as Thieme & Wagner Inc. and expanded several times to become the largest brewery in the state of Indiana for that era until state imposed prohibition took effect in 1918.

When prohibition was amended to the U.S. constitution, the company started operating as the National Fruit Juice Company producing near beer and an apple beverage brand Ye Tavern called Apella.

With the end of prohibition, W.G. Hanger bought the brewery for $200,000 and obtained a brewing permit for the new Lafayette Brewing Inc. After a complete modernization of the plant, LBI started brewing beer using the old recipes from Thieme & Wagner featuring imported hops from Oregon and Czechoslovakia. Using only one large copper cooker that had been retained from Thieme & Wagner, the LBI produced beer for the next 25 years until closing in the mid 1950's.

Brands produced by Thieme & Wagner included; Star City and Tavern Brew.

LBI brands included; Kopper Kettle, Ye Tavern Brew, and Tippecanoe.
